Brief Historical Sketch

The Ninety-Fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry Regiment was mustered into service the summer of 1862. This regiment was important in that it was comprised entirely of volunteers from McLean County. The response was so great that several companies of McLean County men had to be placed in another regiment.

The Ninety-Fourth was led by Col. William W. Orme and second in command was former cavalry commander John McNulta. Both were well to do Bloomington citizens who had previous experience in war. Third in command was Lt. Col. Rankin Laughlin of Heyworth. Majors in the regiment were Alexander Briscoe and James McFarland. The regiment left Bloomington for St. Louis on August 25, 1862 with a force of 930 men. In St. Louis, the regiment trained through the autumn. On December 7, 1862, the Ninety-Fourth participated in the Battle of Prairie Grove, Arkansas. Repeated Confederate charges were repelled by the Union troops. Despite seeing heavy action, the Ninety-Fourth's casualty list included only one killed and twenty-six wounded.

After participating in a minor campaign to secure Van Buren, Arkansas, tragedy struck New Year's Day 1863. As the Ninety-Fourth was marching back into Missouri, Company H Captain Joseph Orme was accidentally shot through the lungs, mortally wounding him. On January 6, 1863, during a Confederate assault on a Springfield garrison, the Ninety-Fourth suffered one dead and two wounded. One month later, seventeen men from the regiment died from pneumonia.

In June and July 1863, the Ninety-Fourth participated in Gen. U. S. Grant's epic siege of Vicksburg, Mississippi. With William Orme's appointment as brigadier general, McNulta was left in command of the regiment. The Ninety-Fourth's role in the siege included digging trenches and capturing rifle pits. Vicksburg, the last Confederate stronghold on the Mississippi River, fell on July 4, 1863.

In August 1863, after an uneventful expedition to Yazoo City, the Ninety-Fourth was sent to Carrollton, Louisiana, located six miles north of New Orleans. Here, the regiment struggled with the swampy terrain, insects, a lack of fruits and vegetables, and the oppressive heat. On September 5, 1863, the Ninety-Fourth engaged in a "running battle" at Morganza, Louisiana with a pocket of Confederates. During the fighting, Col. McNulta was shot in the hip. Though he survived and continued to lead the regiment, he had the noticeable limp the remainder of his life. On October 25, 1863, the Ninety-Fourth boarded a Gulf Coast steamer and participated in the capture of Brownsville, Texas. The regiment stayed in Brownsville for several months, checking the ability of Confederates to cross the border.

In August 1864, the Ninety-Fourth participated in the successful siege and capture of Fort Morgan, Alabama, located on the eastern approach to Mobile Bay. The battle to capture the City of Mobile began on March 25, 1865. An impediment to the taking of the city was the "Spanish Fort," a line of breastworks almost two miles long with forts at either end named "Battery Alexis" and "Spanish Fort Proper." The Ninety-Fourth was placed on the left flank of the Union line across from Battery Alexis. During the siege, the regiment suffered only a handful of casualties, including one killed and three wounded. On April 9, after several days of repeated artillery bombardment, the Ninety-Fourth stormed Battery Alexis. A few days after the fall of its main defenses, the city of Mobile fell to the Union army.

Shortly after the capture of Mobile, Union troops learned of General Robert E. Lee's surrender at Appomattox, Virginia. The Ninety-Fourth was then shipped to Galveston, Texas, and remained there until late July.

On August 9, 1865, the Ninety-Fourth returned home to Bloomington with about 680 men. The men of the Ninety-Fourth were away from home almost three years. They had traveled 1,200 miles by foot, 610 miles by rail, and 6,000 miles by steamer. The regiment from McLean County also took part in nine battles, sieges, and skirmishes.
