If you are like me, any moment of quiet that can still the cacophony in your mind is a most welcome respite these days. As I rush from managing my daughter’s Zoom Kindergarten into the noise of bathroom renovations on the ground floor of our shuttered Museum, I fret. I worry about our elders, the state of our democracy, acquiring a second Payroll Protection Program loan, and whether we have milk in the refrigerator at home. I try to take deep breaths. There was a time in my life when I did not like yoga. Now I delight in a local YMCA class that emphasizes balance, mobility, and strength. My muscles melt. I am restored, at least for a moment.

Claiming these moments of restoration seems urgent and necessary. In that vein, we are dedicating this issue of On the Square to the theme of restoration. We are actively restoring the historical light fixtures in the Museum’s courtroom and rotunda to their original antique verde finish, funded by an Illinois Department of Natural Resources Public Museum Grant and generous private donations. McLean County has approved a roof restoration project to begin in the milder days of spring. Our curatorial department is seeking a preservation planning grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities that will help us improve storage conditions and preserve our collections, enabling us to continue to interpret local history and challenge established narratives. Indeed, we have just reached a milestone for our IMLS-funded Pantagraph Negatives Project, restoring and annotating over 30,000 images that are now accessible through the Illinois Digital Archives.

We are in the process of creating a new strategic plan for the Museum as we look towards reaccreditation with the American Alliance of Museums in 2022, restoring and renewing a vision for our role in the community. We seek to restore the silenced voices from our past as we plan our next Evergreen Cemetery Walk to include McLean County Black residents Alverta and Julia Duff who experienced the Tulsa Race Massacre of 1921. After the events at our nation’s Capitol on January 6, we are compelled to “lean into [our] missions... As interpreters and educators of history and culture, museums and museum professionals have the power to uphold democratic and democratic norms, call out bigotry and hate, and fight for racial justice.” This comes from a joint statement published by national museum associations across the country,* restoring our belief in both what is necessary and what is possible. Restoration is at the heart of our work.

Women Who Made McLean County History

Making history has always come naturally to women, and the women of McLean County are no exception. Yet, the stories of these historic women often go untold. Join Candace Summers, Director of Community Education, on March 30 at 7:00 p.m. via Zoom for a program that will highlight 20 McLean County women who shaped our history. From the first woman Illinois State Senator, Florence Fifer Bohrer; to the “Queen of the Flying Trapeze,” Antoinette Concello; and Civil Rights activist Sister Mary Antona Ebo, this illustrated program will explore their lives and recognize their lasting contributions to our community and our world. Residents of McLean County have witnessed many salient moments in history, including tragedies. One truly horrific blemish on our nation's history—the Tulsa Massacre in 1921—was experienced by two sisters, Julia and Alverta Duff, both born and raised in Normal, Illinois.

Julia and Alverta were daughters of Peter and Fannie Duff. Born into slavery, Peter came north from Kentucky in the years following the United States Civil War to seek a better life. When he arrived in Normal in the early 1870s, he was hired by Jesse Fell, a well-known and respected member of the Bloomington-Normal community. The Duff family was one of the first Black families to establish themselves in Normal.

Education was important to the Duffs. Julia enrolled at Illinois State Normal University in 1912 intending to complete a three-year program in home economics. Alverta attended Brown's Business College and, upon completion of her training, became a bookkeeper at Casey Brother's Dyeing and Cleaning in Bloomington. Alverta was the only one of her brothers and sisters who was able to find a job in Bloomington-Normal because racial discrimination against African Americans was strong.

Because she was Black, Julia was not allowed to teach in white classrooms in McLean County. So, she left Bloomington-Normal to find opportunities that were greater in larger cities for African Americans. Julia moved to Tulsa, Oklahoma by November 1918 and began teaching home economics at the Booker T. Washington High School (located in the city's segregated Greenwood section, so named for the main street that ran through it).

After the First World War, Tulsa was recognized nationally for its affluent African American community known as the Greenwood District. This thriving business district and surrounding residential area (with some 15,000 residents) was referred to as "Black Wall Street." The events that took place from May 31 to June 1, 1921 nearly destroyed the entire district.

On May 30, a 19-year-old Black man named Dick Rowland was accused of violating 17-year-old Sarah Page, a white girl who operated an elevator in the Drexel Building in Tulsa. Details of the account remain unclear as to whether Rowland simply stumbled into her, or worse. Accounts of the incident circulated among the city's white community throughout that day and became more exaggerated with each telling. Tulsa police arrested Rowland on May 31 and began an investigation. An inflammatory report in the Tulsa Tribune on May 31, stating that a "black man had tried to rape a white woman," fueled a confrontation between crowds of Black and white armed civilians surrounding the courthouse, where the sheriff and his men tried to protect Rowland from a lynch mob of 1,000 white men outside the building.
Shots were fired and the outnumbered African American residents began retreating to the Greenwood District, followed by the white mob.

In the early morning hours of June 1, Greenwood was looted and burned by white rioters. The well-armed white mob razed 36 square blocks, looted hundreds of homes and businesses, and killed as many as 300 Black citizens. Many residents of Greenwood were herded into the streets, including Julia Duff. It has also been thought that her sister Alverta was visiting when the massacre occurred, but that remains unclear.

Ten days after the massacre, the Chicago Defender (a Black newspaper) printed a moving account of the tragedy—a letter written by two Black women to an unidentified family member in Chicago. Fortunately, the wealth of details contained in the letter made it possible to identify the authors. “E.A.,” the main author, was Alverta Duff. Her sister, only identified as “Julia,” was Julia Duff. According to the letter, Julia, who was too shaken to document the account herself, provided two short emotional postscripts. Alverta wrote that Julia came to her looking for a place to stay. She mentioned how Julia spoke of getting driven out of the home she stayed in, which belonged to the Smart family. White rioters ordered Julia at gunpoint to put down her traveling bags, but she refused. They made Julia march away from her home and then proceeded to raid the building for sellable items. Alverta wrote that Julia had been awakened at 4:00 a.m. to the sound and sight of the rioters with their guns. Julia reported to her sister that “her legs gave way from under her and she had to crawl about her room, taking things from her closet, putting them in her trunk, for she thought if anything happened, she’d have her trunk packed, and before she got everything in, they heard footsteps on their steps and there were six out there, and ordered Mr. Smart to march, hands up, out of the house.” In the postscript, Julia added, “I don’t know what would be best for me—to express my feelings, running like someone mad or screaming. All I can say is it is horrible! Not a decent home left in Tulsa, and the men look so forsaken! All those fine churches are destroyed.”

Despite this horrific experience, the rioters did not scare Julia away and she continued to teach at Booker T. Washington High School when it reopened that fall. After having taught in Tulsa for 15 years, Julia resigned from her position in 1934 and returned to Normal. In June 1935 she earned her degree from ISNU.

Julia and Alverta’s eyewitness accounts of this disaster will be featured during the 27th annual Evergreen Cemetery Walk this fall, in honor of the 100th anniversary of the Tulsa Massacre. Dates for the 2021 Walk will be announced later this spring.

The Museum and our community owe a debt of gratitude to filmmaker, historian, and freelance writer, Paul Lee; local Black history historian Jack Muirhead; and Greg Koos, Executive Director of the Museum at the time of the discovery of the Duffs’ letter. Without their efforts, the story of Julia and Alverta Duff’s experiences during the Tulsa Massacre would have remained hidden.

Lee was working on a documentary about Black pioneers of the West when he found the Duff sisters’ letter published in the Chicago Defender. Lee’s search for these unnamed witnesses to the Tulsa Massacre provided the Museum and McLean County with a rare glimpse into the life of one family, and the life of a community, region, people, and time.
12 Months of COVID-19

One year ago, on Friday, March 13 at 5:00 p.m., as it became clear that it was only a matter of time before the pandemic arrived in our community, the Museum closed to the public. The first COVID-19 case in the county was announced by the McLean County Health Department on March 19, and the first death in the county was reported on March 22. Since then, at least 160 McLean County residents have lost their lives to the virus, and over 14,175 have had the virus. This has been a challenging time for many, most of all for those who have lost relatives and close friends to the virus, and those who continue to suffer long-term health consequences. Museum staff and board send their condolences to those who have lost someone to COVID-19, and acknowledge the shared trauma our communities have faced in the last 12 months.

To mark the anniversary of the arrival of the pandemic in McLean County, the Museum is partnering with Not In Our Town and local leaders and artists to present a brief ceremony on Friday, March 12 at 5:00 p.m. Join us in person (physically distanced with masks) on the Main Street side of the Museum, or virtually through our Facebook page, to honor the memory of McLean County residents who have lost their lives, and reflect on the impact the pandemic has had on our community over the past year.

Participate in 12MonthsIn6Words

Additionally, we want to know how the pandemic has impacted you. The Museum and its partners, Illinois Wesleyan University, Illinois State University, and Heartland Community College, invite you to contribute six words to the #12MonthsIn6Words project. Using the link provided here, bit.ly/12MonthsIn6Words, you can share any six individual words or a six-word sentence that are meaningful to you as you reflect upon the last 12 months of the COVID-19 pandemic. All submissions are anonymous, but will be shared with the participating institutions of the #12MonthsIn6Words project and may be shared publicly, as well as added to the Museum and university archives.

You can follow the project on Instagram @12monthsin6words.

Volunteers Spread Holiday Cheer!

The Museum prides itself in helping enrich the lives of local older adults living in senior care centers across Central Illinois through our Senior Reminiscence programs. Due to the pandemic, the Museum has been unable to uphold this valued community outreach service as we once did. But, what better way to show our senior friends how much the Museum misses them than by sending them a bit of holiday cheer? Candace Summers, Director of Community Education, invite you to contribute six words to the #12MonthsIn6Words project. In particular order, thank you to the following volunteers for your warmhearted kindness: Marcia Albert, Bob Watkins, Joann Hart, Phyllis VerSteegh, Kathryn Kerr, Carol Koos, Tom Eder, Shelli Opsal, Flora Foltz, Diane Hawk, Kay Henrichs, Suzie Knepler, Kay Ramseyer, Carolyn Yockey, Stan Geison, Pat Hiser, Claron Sharrieff, Tom Sullivan, Anastasia Ervin, Gretchen Monti, Denise Fries-Romack, Sami Romack, Judith Brown, Jo Mink, and Amy, Zoey, and Ellie Bowman.

Since mailing the cards in early December, we have received several thank you sentiments! Carriage Crossing Senior Living in Bloomington said, “Thank you for the beautiful vintage cards for our residents. They really appreciated them and so many said, ‘it’s just so nice to be remembered!’” The Museum has since sent out collections-inspired Valentine's Day cards to keep spreading the love.
Join Librarian Bill Kemp on Tuesday, March 23 at 6:30 p.m. via Zoom as he takes measure of how McLean County has chosen to remember the past in the form of historic markers, monuments, plaques, statuary, and the like. Illustrated with historic and contemporary images, this program—sometimes light-hearted and sometimes serious—will delve deep into this fraught issue with case studies of sites both familiar and forgotten.

You’ll hear all about the fantastical tale of spiritualist Simeon West’s Kickapoo statue in downtown LeRoy; the repeatedly misguided attempts to memorialize Abraham Lincoln’s “Lost Speech;” the sad and lonely fate of the marker to bohemian poet Richard Hovey; and how it came to be that Downtown Bloomington is home to no less than three Abraham Lincoln statues.

This tour of the remembered past will take a hard look at some of the more dubious—historically speaking—markers in the county, including one in Hudson Township commemorating a supposed “last stand” of the Potawatomi, and one in Downtown Bloomington celebrating the site of the nation’s first brick street (spoiler alert: Not true!)

Kemp will also detail the partnership between the Museum and Dr. Mark Wyman, Illinois State University distinguished professor of history, to erect an official Illinois State Historical Society marker at Miller Park. This marker, dedicated in September 2018, addresses the fact that Bloomington enforced racially segregated public beaches during the first half of the twentieth century.

Rather than make lofty pronouncements and sweeping historical judgments, this program will pose a series of questions: Who decides who or what is officially memorialized? How have these decisions been made in the past? What do we owe the past and those who seek to interpret it for us? Lastly, how can communities ensure historical rigor, transparency, openness, and inclusivity when seeking to commemorate the past?

Featured Artifact
Swedish Folk Costume – donated by the Estate of Dave and Norma Ashbrook

The Museum recently received this traditional Swedish folk costume worn by Norma Ashbrook (1931-2009). She purchased it from a home craft store in Stockholm in 1952 near the end of a six-month stay in Sweden as part of the International Farm Youth Exchange. Then a student at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, Ashbrook was one of two Illinois delegates to participate in the program that year. During her stay in Sweden, Ashbrook lived and worked on the farms of three host families, forming lifelong friendships and a deep appreciation for Swedish culture. After her return to Illinois, she wore this costume to various speaking engagements at which she shared her overseas experiences. After graduation from college, Ashbrook continued to be involved with international outreach, hosting international students and working in the Office of International Studies and Programs at Illinois State University.

The style and colors of this traditional Swedish woman’s folk costume identify it as an example of the regional dress of Rättvik in Dalarna, an area of Sweden known for preserving its folk traditions. Entirely handmade, the costume includes a green satin bodice decorated with embroidered flowers and ribbons, a white blouse with woven decorative bands on the sleeves, a white shawl with tatting, a silver brooch, a striped wool skirt, and a wool “bonnet” with bright red pom poms.

Utilizing Split-Interest Charitable Trusts to Distribute Gifts

Let’s say you are planning to make a major charitable gift to your alma mater or other qualified charity, but you also need to provide for your heirs. How can you balance these competing interests?

Here is a solution: Explore a split-interest charitable trust. Such a trust has both private and charitable beneficiaries (hence, the “split”). You contribute assets to an irrevocable trust, either for a set number of years, a beneficiary’s lifetime, or the lifetimes of more than one beneficiary. The private beneficiaries receive trust distributions that are defined either as a specific dollar amount annually (an “annuity trust”) or a specified percentage of the trust’s value, determined annually (a “unitrust”). In periods of inflation, growth in asset values will lead to growing distributions to beneficiaries. In periods of economic uncertainty, on the other hand, the annuity trust alternative gives beneficiaries the peace of mind of a set number of dollars coming in, regardless of what the markets do.

When the trust terminates, the assets pass to a designated charity. This facet of the plan gives rise to income, gift, and estate tax charitable deductions, stretching the financial protection of your resources. A charitable remainder trust may be established during life or in your will. It can be especially appropriate if you wish to diversify a portfolio with highly appreciated assets.

Be sure to consult with your tax advisors before making any irrevocable decisions.

Last issue’s mystery picture postcard featured Asian Arts Associates, a long-gone business located two miles north of Towanda on old Route 66. Richard Long opened his shop in 1965 to sell imported handicrafts and objet d’art from Asia and the South Pacific. The parking lot included a rebuilt Philippine stilt house and granary. Those who knew at least part of this story included Mark A. Cooper, Bill Caisley, Linda Garbe, Jane Haab, Norm Hiser, and Terry Irvin. The Asian Arts postcard was donated to the Museum last year by volunteer Nola Marquardt.

Mystery History Quiz

Does this body of water—seen here in 1933—look familiar to anyone? Today, this park-like area is well within Bloomington’s city limits. For many years, it was a popular spot for outdoor recreation, including swimming and fishing. Can you name this pond/lake and tell us something about its history? If so, contact Librarian Bill Kemp at bkemp@mchistory.org or 309-827-0428.
